Dear Governor Palin:

I saw you on Glenn Beck's show this week, and I was really impressed with you. It is so refreshing to hear someone speak in a common sense manner. Your views on Anwar et al were right on, and I applaud you for stating it so well. I wish there were more governors like you. You would make an excellent president (forget being VP)!!

God's blessing on you and your family, and congratulations on your latest child.

I just came across an article in today's email that mention that John McCain may consider you for his VP. After extensively reading information from your site and relating news articles, I wanted to write to say that I would be very excited to see you accept that offer if it comes your way. You are what America needs and have much to give to the Republican Party. We need "new blood" and "change we can believe in" and I feel confident you can provide both.

Good luck in all future endeavors, whatever they may be.

Dear Governor Palin,

I am a Greek Orthodox priest and serve as Chaplain of a Convent.

My purpose for writing you is two-fold:

1- I just read an article today in which you were mentioned as an excellent candidate for Vice President. After checking out many of your positions, I have to agree with the article's conclusion. It especially pleases me to see that you are solidly pro-life and pro-family, and that you have five children. (Thanks be to God, I have 4 children and 11+ grandchildren.)

2- When I google-searched your name, three images appeared. The 3rd image shocked me, until I realized that it was not you. It appears that, because your name was associated with the article in which this picture was included, the search engine placed the photograph with the two of those that were of you. If possible, I suggest that you have a member of your staff contact Google to see if they can remove it.

I am going to pray that, if God so wills, you will be selected by Mr. McCain as his running mate. Presently, I am hesitant to cast my vote for him; and unless he chooses you, or someone with similar conservative credentials, I may even write-in Ronald Reagan!

The blessings and mercies of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ be with you and your family.

Yours in the risen Lord,

+Fr. James Carellas

P.S. - Several years ago, I had the joy to offer a retreat at an Orthodox Church in Wasilla. It remains as one of my most favorite trips in my 33+ years as a priest. Your state is so beautiful, and Wasilla's citizens were very hospitable.

Gov. Palin,

Good morning and best wishes. My name is Julian Vann and I am a Vice President for a large privately owned business here in Georgia just a few miles south of Atlanta. I am also a very conservative Republican who follow the political landscape very closely. I just read an article posted on Real Clear Politics that was written by Jack Kelly. The article pertains to your possible consideration as a VP running mate for Sen. John McCain and I must tell you, after reading the article detailing your background, I could not agree more.

I am convinced that if a Republican is going to reside in the White House for the next four years, Sen. McCain must choose a running mate that is going to excite the base as well as Independents and Reagan Democrats. Although I know very little about Alaskan politics, I do know that from exploring your background on the web you are THE ONE! I believe that you can bring a level of excitement to the election process that rivals or surpasses that of Sen. Obama.

I hope that the VP offer will be made and that you will accept. This country is ready for change, ready for someone like you.

Wishing you and your family the very best,

Julian Vann

Sara: Thank you for lowering State Flags in honor of former Senator Mitch Aboods' passing.

Your office missed a serious opportunity to cement a part of Alaska's past history by not having a representative of your office at his Memorial Service on 6/3/08. You should have sent someone to read a statement from you at the Memorial Service.

Without a question in my mind: The Memorial Service had as many if not more former Gov candidtates, Mayors, former Mayors, former State Senators and Representatives, 4 Generals of The Military current and retired, former Lt Govenor, represntative of a former Govenor with standing room only for the overflow guests of personal friends and neighbors. All of this was following burial at Fort Richardson with full Military Honors.

This memorial was a gathering of the giants of Alaska history almost as big as Statehood: and they all came togother for their friend Mitch Abood. It truly was an emotional gathering of recapturing the memories of a significant member of our State. Mitch touched the lives of a large cross section of people.

It is a part of your job as Govenor to recognize those people like Mitch, in a personal manner to their families and the public. The flag lowering was fine, but I expected you to do that. Involve the family of the deceased as well with open recognition by your office's presence and participation.

June 4, 2008

Dear Honorable Governor Palin,

Christ is Risen! Congratulations to you and your family, for welcoming your new infant, to life in Alaska and into the world! It was very refreshing and inspiring, to hear the words of an Alaskan Governor, that set the highest standard and presented the highest example, to all Alaskan Mothers and mothers to be and working mothers and all Alaskans, by sharing your personal, intimate and inspirational faith, through the media, with the words, ("God" has entrusted us), referring to your new responsibilities, for your new born infant.

It is clear, that our Creator has chosen you and your family to lead and show, (by example, as you are,) the way to carry your personal cross and crosses, as a family, and at the same time, graciously accept, the great gift and blessing, of a new and unique human life, with perhaps, special needs. The greatest of all special human needs, of course, being love.

The Acts of the honorable Apostles says; that Saint Paul and Saint Barnabas traveled to various cities, "strengthening the souls of the disciples" (Acts 14:22) May their holy prayers and the prayers of Mary, the holy, ever-virgin, Mother of God, give you and your family strength and strengthen your souls, as you all give your love and the love and compassion of the Lord, in your caring and nurturing and raising of your new child.

May God's mercy, grace and love, be with you always,

With love in our resurrected Lord and God and Saviour, Jesus Christ,

Governor Palin,

My mom saw you on a talk show recently and asked if I had seen it. I did not but she told me that you had recently had your fifth child who had Down Syndrome. I have three daughters, 18, 17, 13 and one son, 11, who has Down Syndrome also. I hope your son is healthy and happy. We knew ahead of time that we were having a son with Down Syndrome. It took a little longer to bond with him than it did with the girls (he was in NICU for 9 weeks and I had health problems for several months) but bond with him I did and now I can honestly tell you that our whole family cannot imagine life without William. I am sending a poem I wrote about him when he was 18 months old. He has changed our lives in ways that have made us better than we would have been without him. I pray that God blesses you and your family as you serve Alaska and as you parent a very special child.

My Son

When I look into his eyes and see the innocence and love,

I know that my special child was sent from up above.

And when I see that smile that lights up his whole face,

I know that I have truly been touched by God's grace.

As he learns each new thing, even though he is behind,

I applaud each little step and know that through him I will find,

That simpleness of life and the things that matter most,

Are not the same accomplishments that other parents boast,

But through my little William, who had a shaky start,

I've learned that peace and joy and love are matters of the heart.

And when in my weakness, with other children I compare,

May God graciously remind me that He's always standing there.

Right beside me, to guide me, holding my hand and my son's too,

And I know that little William sees Him better than I do.

Is that what makes him smile so bright and hold his hands up in the air?

Is he playing with God's angels who have him in their care?

My son has taught me many things about the Father's love,

The biggest one is knowing that He sent you from above!

My doctorsm told me what my child would and woulndt do by such and such an age, but i worked with my daughter and she has surpassed all of those obstacles the doctors tossed at me, my daughter is now 13 years old, and graduatong tomorrow from 7th grade with honor. And the best thing you can don education choicewise is to let your child attend intergrated schooling, so that he can conform to the world as it will be when he grows up in it, i started my daughter off in special schooling but was very disappointed in the program , simply because they didnt push the envelope in my childs abilities, but once chose regular education for her i was very impressed on how she blossomed. MESSAGE:

I heard you on Glenn Beck last night and what a breath of fresh air to hear a government offical speak to the needs of our country. My mouth drops--it seems like everyday now--when I hear Washington talk about global warming--the big scare--it is just an hypothesis--yet it is changing our entire world--destroying our country, our economy and causing us to become more and more dependent on our enemies.

I feel like Washington is being run by our enemies--destroying us--what are they doing. Senate hearings debunking the demise of polar bears--and then placing them on the endangered list--my mouth drops again.

Please keep up your fight for ANWR. If there is anything that a common person can do please let me know. For the first time in my life I have written to my senators and congressmen--their reply Thank you for writing but "I" feel that drilling in ANWR is bad and we are going to look into other means--like ethanol distilled from corn--is this man for real--this has devastated our food industry and it doesn't even begin to solve the problem.

I've heard more than one person mention your name for VP--right now McCain is the least of 3 evils but if you were on the ticket you would bring so much to the party

Thanks you again and keep up your fight

Governor Palin,

I have seen you speak on various programs recently and have read about you. From what I have read, I sincerely hope that more people like you run for office, stay in office, and help run this great nation.

I applaud your honesty, family values, and straight-forward, no-nonsense approach to deal with issues relating to our country.

If running for any kind of federal office is in your future, you will always have my support.

Keep up the great work.

Subject: Point Thomson

I am surprised and a little bit disturbed that I have not been contacted by either of you about my concerns with the DNR Commissioner's decision at Point Thomson. I have provided a substantial amount of information to you that would make anyone stop and reconsider their decision, but I have heard nothing but silence from you. It is as if the old statement "Don't bother me with the facts. My mind is already made up" really does apply in this case.

I still would like to see the governor regarding this issue. She needs to understand the costs before she decides to stand back, under the guise of loyalty, and allow DNR to make a poor decision. All she needs to do is ask the DNR Commissioner to perform his responsibility under 11 AAC 83.343(b) and tell the Point Thomson owners what a reasonable Plan of Development would be. This is a simple task, and I can't understand why he wouldn't do it.

If he does not do what I believe is the minimum responsibility of the sovereign in this case, this process was probably predetermined from the beginning. It probably means that DNR's intent was to try to take back the leases regardless of what the Point Thomson owners proposed. That is not their responsibility, and I believe such an act is both illegal and unethical. Their responsibility to every taxpayer (and lessee) is to try to resolve the issue if possible, and as a last resort take back the asset if they cannot come to resolution.

In this case the DNR commissioner has met his legal process obligations under the law by "reconsidering" the prior decision, but he has not met the intent of the law. This issue was an easy one to solve, but DNR seems to have consciously decided not to do so.

If I am right and DNR issues the reconsideration decision without attempting to resolve the problem, then it will be a sad day for Alaska. I hope I am wrong. I have been supportive of the governor, and I have worked behind the scenes in several areas to help her administration be successful. I will continue to do that where I can, but when I see unethical behavior in her administration, I cannot support it.

This will be my last correspondence with you as it seems to be unproductive for either of us.

Steve

Bush Headlines Summit

Small Business Owners Meet With Lawmakers

At the U.S. Chamber's Small Business Summit, President George W. Bush praised small businesses and the Chamber for their contributions to the economy and to the policy debate in Washington, D.C.

During his remarks on April 18, the president singled out the Chamber and its members for pushing a pro-growth business agenda, including passage of the economic stimulus bill. "I want to thank members of Congress and members of the Chamber for working on what I believe is going to be a very effective pro-growth stimulus package," Bush said. "Thank you for being dreamers and doers. One of the reasons I spend a lot of time talking about small business owners in America is because I truly believe that you represent what makes America great," he said to a loud round of applause.

Message:I was incredibly disappointed that you chose to veto the state portion of the grant money for the Serenity House Treatment Center. This much needed money was to be combined with other grants that staff had worked very hard to procure, and would have allowed the facility to purchase an ideal piece of property - complete with a house. The new location would have provided 4-6 more beds, allowing more people in our community to be healed by this life-changing program. There are so many people out there in need, shouldn't our state government be helping its citizens by supporting this grant? The hospital has already done all they could to ensure this expansion could be a reality, and I believe more than half the money needed is coming from sources other than the state government. Everything is in place but your cooperation. I urge you to reconsider this decision. There are many others who feel the way that I do, and I hope that they will feel called to write to you as well. Serenity House saves lives! Please, do the right thing. Thank you, Sandee

This winter my grandson (Braden - Duncan Shackelford's little guy) attended a day camp in a tiny litte house owned by the zoo. It was an incredible experience and according to him "Owl Pellets" are the greatest thing ever. Yet only a few other kids could go because due to a lack of space.

Please help The Alaska Zoo - the facility is so close to being a completed gem and with your support of capital funding you can make it a diamond!

Our zoo plays a vital role in our state as a leader in wildlife conservation, an education resource for teachers and students statewide and as a tourist destination. It needs capital funding and you can make that happen.

Governor Palin, please invest in the Alaska Zoo! It is our children and grandchildrens' future and it is my absolutely most favorite place to take my grandson for a day of fun.

Sincerely,

Message:Governor Palin,

With respect to the windfall revenues that the State of Alaska is receiving due to the high price of oil, I suggest that rather than provide each citizen of Alaska with an energy card and each utility with a subsidy that the money would be better spent on enhancing Alaska,Äôs educational system.

When I speak of Alaska,Äôs educational system I am referring to the University of Alaska (UA), not the local educational units ,Äì those should be funded locally. However, UA, in my opinion, is the responsibility of the State for funding. UA is an economic engine, a source of pride, and the pathway to the future. I believe it is in every Alaskan,Äôs best interest to have an institution of higher education on par with the best that the United States has to offer.

My recommendation is to fund an endowment for UA with the money that would otherwise be spent on energy assistance. This funding is in addition to the current level of funding that the University receives. I further recommend that UA establish some doctoral programs based in Anchorage. Currently UAF is the terminal granting institution in Alaska ,Äì however, the Anchorage region is the population and economic center of Alaska. This imbalance should receive attention to correct.

Should one desire to attract new clean industries (those typically based on intellectual property creation) to Alaska, then Alaska must enhance its University. Alaska traditionally has relied upon natural resources as its economic engine; it is now time to prepare for the next century.

Governor Palin, thank you for your time

Message:Dear Gov. Palin,

I am protesting your cut of "the Anchorage Covenant House expansion -- $1.1 million" and putting in "UAA sports arena planning and design -- $15 million. " This doesn't make sense at all.

Why are you investing $15 million into the UAA Sports arena and taking away more potential rooms for homeless teens? How do you sleep at night knowing you're probably leaving a lot of homeless teens in Anchorage homeless in the cold? Please re-instate the $1.1 million for the Covenant House expansion.

Thank you

Message:Regarding my previous comments, I truly believe I speak for numerous people in Alaska right now with my previous comments on the budget and axing millions. In addition, I forgot to mention one very important aspect of my point. That is Governor Palin‚Äôs has this irrational assumption with her veto ax plan that "bonds" should pay for the difference, which ultimately means an increase in our property taxes as a property owner. Does this governor not realize that is exactly what will happen with her ‚Äúbonds option‚Äù to pay the difference? We are paying enough property taxes as it is & has already caused some to lose their homes and/or leave the state? Property taxes are too high in Anchorage as it is. To have this casual expectation for property owners to pay more property taxes right now when oil is at record highs (to make up the difference for the budget) is equally appalling? No one should have to lose their job with oil being at record highs (especially teachers & teacher assistants/aides). I also just learned that the Anchorage Police Dept. was once again denied their requested funding for more office space for storing records, and that is unacceptable as well with our oil revenues being at record highs.

Again, I don't plan on voting for Governor Palin again for any office position (current or higher).

ALASKA ONE Public television has in my opinion began a campaign to advance a "Gay Rights" stance in public braodcasting. I personally believe that a publically finded organization should remain TOTALLY MUTE on this subject. That is to say their programming should neither advance nor decry such issues, basically they should take a no coment stance.

However, this far from the current programming stance of the currrent ALASKA ONE administration. they are taking great pains to carry as much PRO Gay Rights programming as possible while carring little or none of that supporting the opposing view. In my opinion, this is a broblem not so much of content as Balance.

Thank you for your time.

MESSAGE:

Gov. Palin,

I've seen several articles mentioning your name as a possible running mate for John McCain this election year. I was completely opposed to Hilary getting the nomination, so I'm glad that she didn't get the nomination, but I firmly believe this country is going to vote for a white man over a black man, regardless of the change policies Obama is marketing, and regardless of John McCain's qualifications. Please don't get me wrong, my husband and I will be voting for McCain because of his policies over Obama's. But the thought of a woman finally getting to show those men how it's done, who is intelligent and very accomplished in her own right, is down right appealing and makes sense with the way this election campaign has been going so far.

So my question, Gov. Palin, do you even want to be Vice President, or are these articles just fluff that should not be taken seriously? I know you probably can't answer that question right now as things stand, but I wish you the best of luck if you are asked to be his running mate. You'd certainly have our votes! Crystal Price

MESSAGE:

The rumor mill is already brewing that the honorable Senator McCain might invite you to take the VP slot. This might really make the GOP election chances remain competitive this year, in fact, your political style is on target with McCain's current message, and your stance on the issues could energize the typical republican base; and nearly match the historical nature of the democratic party's offering this year.

Both parties this year, must run on change. McCain is right to voice concern over right change, and wrong change. He is a good, and honorable senator; but he has always fallen short of the presidency (even his own party's nomination) on the basis that he often lacks a presidential voice; and that he's often too moderate to sure up support of his base.

If he gives you an invitation to the VP spot, you can both sure up that support (because you are 100 percent conservative--and without strong ties to Bush's form of the word conservative, or any ties to the most unpopular congress/senate body ever.) You make up for a lot of the qaulities that McCain lacks, but needs; but also would be on message with his own platform for the right kind of change. Not just that, but with McCain's age definitely being a concern of most voters, his VP needs to be someone who is greatly trusted, and admired, and can assume office in the event that he is no longer able to attend to the daily business of the president. In an age where typical voters don't normally really care who the VP is, he really needs a great VP.

But, if you're not ready for a national office; have a grasp on all the current issues facing the nation, and wish to stick with Alaska, (because I admit I know nothing of your political aspirations) it would be better to wait a few more years, and run for president yourself on your own merits with no strong affiliation to the old gaurd of the GOP.

I used to be a republican, but I'm now strictly independant. I voted for Bush against Gore, and just abstained during Bush versus Kerry, and am leaning towards Obama for President in this election, even though I'm pro-life, and I know he's not, because I just don't think four more years of Bush can be tolerated if McCain ardently follows the course he has set. Bush isn't offering a leadership that has the qaulity of being progressive and and promising productive future--he's too busy attacking other people's agendas; and I fear McCain is following that expample way too much to even have an honest chance once the debates are underway. Someone in the GOP needs to bring an offering that's above and beyond the status qou, and with something more of substance than mocking the other party's whole agenda. The GOP definitely needs someone who is strong on the economy, hard on corruption, and conservative (not hawkish) on foriegn policy.

If you think you can do that than you definitely need to consider accepting the VP spot if McCain offers. But, if someone else get's the spot; Because of what I've heard, I'd definitely give you a fair hearing should you decide to run for a higher office later on.

Best Regards,

Benjamin Tidwell

PS: I'm loosing my job in the school system I work for in less than a month to very severe budget cuts in Florida, and though I don't know what I'm going to do next yet, I desperately do not want to apply for unemployment, so if there are any good jobs up in Alaska I might qualify for don't hesitate to let me know! At the moment, I'm open to just about anything that will let me afford a place to live, and finish paying off my car!

MESSAGE:

Dear Honorable Governor Palin,

Ruth and I have been a faithful republican party members for many years now. I am 54 years old and my wife is 53. We are drawn to the republican party through our Christian religion, in which we believe the morality of our nation - as taught in The Holy Bible - is necessary for a healthy government. We are very concerned about the future of our world, more specifically our nation - The United States of America.

Liberalism is running rampant and the values that were established as "One Nation Under God" are dwindling away. We're killing our unborn and saving trees from being cut down. We're allowing same sex marriages. We're giving tax advantages to couples who live together out of wedlock, and taxing to death male/female couples who are united in holy matrimony. Somethings not quite right here!

We have great respect for the governor of our state (Minnesota). Governor Palenty is a wonderful man and a tremendous leader. His name has been mentioned as a potential candidate as vice president to run with Senator McCain. We are not sure he is ready for this. We would, however, hope that his political future goes beyond this state at some point in history.

This brings us to you. A couple months ago someone mentioned that you would be a very viable and excellent candidate to become the Vice President of the United States of America. Quite honestly, we had not heard of you up until 2-3 months ago. Since then,we have been exploring who you are and what you stand for. We are impressed! You are a woman of great integrity, sound values, and you are not easily intimidated by contradicting opinions or positions. We would like to strongly encourage you to make known your willingness to run with Senator McCain for the office of Vice President. Only you know if this is the right time and the right thing to do, but PLEASE consider it! If you are willing,you must get your name out into the public by declaring your availability. We intend to e-mail Senator McCain and share our thinking with him too. We know that we are just a couple "small fish in the sea", but even Rome was built one brick at a time. Therefore, we are making our preference known to both you and Senator McCain

We will be praying for you, hoping that you (or at least someone who shares your values) will be selected. Blessings as you serve the State of Alaska, and hopefully this great nation!

Great. Also- does Diane have time to bake cookies for legislators who are mtg on AGIA today? I could walk them over to the Terry Miller bldg where they are meeting (see Gavel to Gavel) - Kris is finding out how many folks are there so we have a count for cookies - if Diane has time for this. I'll let u know the count.

Re: Recommendation to Veto the $2 Million Dollar Alaska Legislature Appropriation for a Conference on Climate Change and Polar Bears

Dear Governor Palin:

The purpose of this letter is to strongly recommend that you reconsider your approval of the $2 million dollar Alaska Legislature appropriation request for a conference on climate change and polar bears and, instead, veto the item.

Based purely on fiscal considerations, it is absurd to think that $2 million dollars is required to hold a scientific conference and disseminate results. For about thirty years I have been responsible for holding and widely disseminating results from scientific conferences and the costs have never remotely approached $2 million dollars.

The appropriation request is based on faulty knowledge and incorrect conclusions about the scientific consensus on global climate change and its impacts on polar bears. In particular, the commentary written by Alaska Senator Lyda Green and Representative John Harris in the 21 May 2008 Anchorage Daily News ‚Äú$2 Million Conference on Polar Bears, Climate is Justified‚Äù is full of misconceptions about the state of global climate change science. In fact, the issue of ‚Äúscientific uncertainty‚Äù about global climate change and its human attribution has been settled for some time within the scientific community; so is the impact of global climate change on polar bears.

By the end of the 1970s most scientific studies indicated that climate forcing would likely be dominated by anthropogenic greenhouse gases accumulating in the earth‚Äìatmosphere system from around 1750 and onwards. The world‚Äôs most expert body on climate change, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) issued major reports in the early 1990‚Äôs that concluded ‚ÄúA clear scientific consensus has emerged in the 21st Century; this report was reviewed by over 700 scientists from around the world.2 The IPCC‚Äôs ‚ÄúSecond Assessment Report‚Äù was issued in 1995, and contained the conclusion that a ‚Äúbalance of the evidence (on climate change) showed a discernable human influence on climate.‚Äù3 In 2001, the IPCC‚Äôs third assessment report was released, and made specific predictions about how human actions would change the global climate and how climate change would affect human health and the environment.4 The third assessment confirmed and expanded upon previous IPCC reports and concluded that there was additional evidence that human‚Äìinduced climate change had already become noticeable around the world.

Recently, the IPCC‚Äôs fourth assessment (AR4) documented the substantial vulnerability of high latitude regions, including places such as Alaska, to the impacts from global climate change.5 This report concluded with a confidence greater than 90 percent that human activities are the primary drivers responsible for the atmospheric build‚Äìup of greenhouse gases and its resultant public health and environmental impacts. (The AR4 had over 2500 scientific expert reviewers, over 800 contributing authors, over 450 lead authors, and took six years of work.). The AR4‚Äôs ‚ÄúWorking Group II (WG II)‚Äù also notes: (1)‚Äúthat of the more than 29,000 observational data series,‚Ääthat show significant change in many physical and biological systems, more than 89 percent are consistent with the direction of change expected to warming;‚Äù (2)that a synthesis of studies used in WG II strongly demonstrates the spatial agreement between regions of significant warming across the globe and the locations of significant changes in many systems consistent with warming is very unlikely to be due solely to natural variability of temperatures or natural variability of the systems;‚Äù and (3)climate models with ‚Äúcombined natural and anthropogenic forcing simulate observed responses significantly better than models with natural forcings only.‚Äù6

Parenthetically, you should be aware that the IPCC is conservative insofar as being careful to avoid making attributions about climate change under conditions of scientific uncertainty. In fact, its charter requires it to avoid speculation where possible. Consequently, the IPCC does not do original research but relies on conclusions from peer‚Äìreviewed scientific journals that typically employ a normative standard of requiring a high degree of confidence for conclusions (e.g., 95 percent confidence level).

At the request of President Bush, in 2005 the U.S. National Academy of Sciences was requested to present findings on the current state of climate science.,Äù In his testimony to Congress on the findings of the report, Dr. Ralph Cicerone, President of NAS, stated ,ÄúNearly all climate scientists today believe that much of the Earth,Äôs current warming has been caused by increases in the amount of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, mostly from the burning of fossil fuels.,Äù7 This conclusion is basically the same conclusion issued in the NAS,Äôs 2001 and 2008 report, respectively.8

In 2005, several national academies of science issued a joint statement wherein they concluded, ,Äú,Ä¶there is now strong evidence that significant global warming is occurring,Äù,Ä¶.,Äúit is likely that most of the warming in recent decades can be attributed to human activities. This warming has already led to changes in the Earth,Äôs climate.,Äù9 The national academies were: National Academy of Sciences (United States), Royal Society (United Kingdom), Royal Society of Canada (Canada), Russian Academy of Sciences (Russia), Chinese Academy of Sciences (China), Science Council of Japan (Japan), Indian National Science Academy (India), Academie des Sciences (France), Deutsche Akademie der Naturforscher (Germany), Accademia dei Lincei (Italy), and Academia Brasiliera de Ciencias (Brazil).

The above studies I have mentioned, along with other major recent studies on global climate change (e.g., American Association for the Advancement of Science,10 the American Geophysical Union,11 and the American Meteorological Society12), support the view that the Earth,Äôs climate is changing and that most of the change is attributable to human activities since 1750.

The Alaska legislative request and in particular Senator Green,Äôs and Representative Harris,Äôs rationale for the request and, presumably, your approval of the request are predicated on the view ,Äúthat it is imperative that we critically analyze the science behind climate change and develop a true consensus before enacting legislation based on the claims of that science.,Äù How much of a ,Äúconsensus,Äù do they or you want? And what would a ,Äúconsensus,Äù look like? If there is no trust in the credibility of the aforementioned scientific organizations,Äô studies, who should one trust? There is probably a greater consensus about global climate change than any other major scientific or environmental problem. And, there is a huge consensus about the threat global climate change poses to polar bears; the state of Alaska,Äôs position on polar bears is at odds with almost every national and international scientific study of threats from global climate change on polar bears

Although more scientific studies always will yield more information, there is an urgency to take immediate action if we are to avoid the serious consequences of global climate change, both for humans and polar bears. Further, there is not one local, state, or federal agency that requires full scientific certainty for decision or policymaking. (In fact, science can never provide full and absolute certainty.). Neither is full certainty (or ,Äúconsensus,Äù) required for social or economic policies. Have all of your decisions been based on full certainty? Have those of Senator Green or Representative Harris? I doubt it.

Given the scientific consensus on the human attribution of global climate change as well as threats to polar bears, using ,Äúscientific uncertainty,Äù to delay mitigation of global climate change or protection of polar bears has unfortunate ethical and moral consequences. I am unaware of any secular or religious ethics or morals that would exonerate someone engaged in risky behavior simply because there was some uncertainty involved in determining whether his/her behavior would actually cause damage. There are many laws that implement this well,Äìestablished norm. For instance, for a defendant to be convicted of reckless driving or reckless endangerment, a prosecutor simply has to prove the defendant acted in a way that he/she should have known to be risky. Furthermore, the ethical duty to avoid risky behavior is proportional to the magnitude of the potential harm, particularly to those who have not consented to being placed at risk. Certainly, global climate change poses risks of harm of great magnitude.

Therefore, as a matter of ethics a relevant question in the face of scientific uncertainty about harmful consequences of human behavior is whether there is a reasonable basis for concluding that serious harm to other humans or species could result from the behavior. As I have pointed out above, scientists have understood that human attribution is the main driver of global climate change since at least the first IPCC report, and probably before then. For this reason, states and nations cannot deny that their release of greenhouse gases creates a significant risk to human and environmental health around the world, even if there might be some disagreement with, e.g., the specific predictions of the timing and magnitude of the impacts from global climate change. Therefore, states and nations emitting significant amounts of greenhouse gases have been engaged in risky behavior and this risky behavior has ethical consequences even if there might be some uncertainty about some aspects of actual consequences.13,Äì15

Given the fact that the United States with 5.6 percent of the world,Äôs population contributes about 24 percent of the annual anthropogenic emissions of greenhouse gases to the atmosphere (and also is responsible for the majority of historical emissions), it is our duty to significantly reduce emissions because of the real and potential harm caused to others, including other species such as polar bears. Further, it also is Alaska,Äôs duty to reduce greenhouse gas emissions given that on a per capita basis the state produces about four times the amount of the per capita average in the United States. I also remind you that under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (ratified by the United States), nations are responsible for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, including sub,Änational governments, businesses, and organizations.16

Message:Regarding the article; ‚ÄúPalin's veto ax lops $268 million from budget,Äù and as a conservative Alaskan who did vote for Palin.

If oil was $60 or $70 per barrel, I could see being more careful with spending and taking such action as Palin just did. Cutting the budget like Palin just did while we currently have $130+ oil & putting people out of work and ultimately impacting economic spending in the process is recklessly irresponsible, unacceptable & without saying- completely unnecessary. The ‚Äúsaving for a rainy day,Äù justification is no longer an excuse with the amount of revenues this state is now taking in on oil alone. My own personal survey on this action by Palin with friends, family & acquaintances resulted in every single person agreeing with me, and they will not be voting for her again as well if she where to run for re-election (either for Governor again or for a higher office).

Words cannot express our disappointment in this governor‚Äôs decision making process regarding the budget axing. Many people I have spoken to can only view Palin‚Äôs recent demeanor & actions as an arrogant carelessness to show she has a position of power, and that she will use it at any cost. Regardless of the amount people who‚Äôs lives will unfortunately & unnecessarily be adversely affected with job losses. Again, Palin‚Äôs actions come when oil is $130+ a barrel. This is entirely unacceptable action by any sitting governor.

Thank you for listening to my important concerns.

Our State has a huge surplus of money if these projects are not a prioriety now when will they be? How are they suppose to get power to the new prison? Now MEA rate payers will have to pay because the State listened to a bunch of whiners and put the prison in an area with no infrastructure. Unlike most of the other items, it supports the poor of our state, the most vulnerable. It gets lots of private donation support already, but this is a positive -- it shows community suppurt, but it still needs a lot more for the needy, and it shows the community matching State funds with more donated funds, unlike most other projects. The poor and homeless have no lobbiest, no big vote, no substantial influence, just personal and real need. We should support the Conenant House with State support as well. It's the rignt thing to do. Thank you for your condiseration.

There is an elemenary school on the street; it is a major bus route; it is a major route into Ocean View. I have asked the City to do something about it and they just say that it is the State's responsibilty. The City says that if the State will renovate the road, the City will take over its maintenance. Please, Sarah, reconsider your veto of the John's road project. If you doubt what I am saying about the road, I implore you to take the time and drive down it. We just received a heads-up that you are vetoing the $50,000 that was included in the Capital Budget for land purchase for senior housing in Homer. We would like to know the rationale behind the veto of this item? These funds were very important to us in completing our housing project and if ever there was a need for senior housing, now is the time.

$50,000 is a small item in the total Capital Budget, however, it was a major item for us and the completion of our project.

I went through the same line of questioning with Kyle yesterday for 45 minutes. He wants to know our position on Knik Arm. What I told him several times is that public funds are involved, anytime public funds are involved, officials should perform a reasonable amount of due diligence. That means getting all the information we need to evaluate the project so an informed decision can be made. So we are asking hard questions of KABATA. We will keep asking hard questions until we are satisfied with the answers.

I also told him that we just received 80 pages of information this week from KABATA. That information is being reviewed by experts at DOT and LAW who will provide input back to us.

The answer to Kyle's question of pursuing the project even if it means the state puts more money into it could be Privileged or Per

Privileged or Personal Material Redacted

The answer to Kyle's question whether the bridge is a good thing could be:

Privileged or Personal Material Redacted

The answer to the question of how Knik Arm compares with Gravina could be:

Privileged or Personal Material Redacted

Kyle has Frank Richard's April 22, 2008, letter to KABATA asking a lot of tough questions.

Kyle has somehow gotten a copy of Frank's letter to KABATA. It's 3 pages of tough questions to them about the project and again asking KABATA to education the public and legislators on all the details of the project.

I don't know how he got it.

Yeah -- I'm trying to take the pulse of KABATA and the bridge project in the wake of George Wuerch leaving last month, and DOT asking some hard questions about the project costs and potential risk to the state.

I'd want to ask the governor things like whether she supports pursuing the project even if it means the state needs to put more money in it, and how she sees the project in comparison to the Gravina Island bridge.

Dear Governor:

I am asking you to lend your support for the $250,000 appropriation for the Sitka Sound Science Center to continue hatchery operations at the Sage Building on the former Sheldon Jackson campus.

My wife and two sons had the pleasure of meeting you during your visit to Sitka last October. I also had the opportunity to speak with you and your staff during my interview for the Sitka Superior Court judicial selection process. I want to let you know you made a good decision and that Judge David George is doing an excellent job on the bench.

My family depends upon local salmon not only as a healthy food source but also as an important family bonding and educational time in harvesting and processing our salmon. The fish produced from the hatchery help sustain our unique Alaskan way of life. In this way, the grant money is an investment in not only Alaska but Alaskans.

Additionally, it would be a travesty to lose this important educational facility as it is ideally situated in southeast Alaska with an unparalleled access to the natural resource environments for continued study and analysis.

Thanks,

Jude Pate

Evaluating Structural Adjustment: A Dissenting Opinion

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) and World Bank (WB) have come under heavy scrutiny for their structural adjustment programs. These programs, which feature loans conditional upon neoliberal economic reforms, have been implemented countless times in numerous developing countries since the 1980s. Recently, these loans have been criticized for failing to provide the promised economic growth and for adversely affecting the poor. Today, it has become expedient for politicians to blame IMF and WB programs as the source of their countrys past and current economic woes; railing against the policies of the IMF and WB has become a common theme of Latin Americas resurgent populist leaders. Yet, the truth of the matter is that the IMF and WBs structural adjustment programs are not solely to blame for the economic plight that hit many developing countries. Structural adjustment could still be a sound policy; it simply needs to be revised in light of its multiple probl ems.

Misplaced Criticism
One of the primary complaints against structural adjustment policies is that they disproportionately harm the poor. Critics claim that by forcing governments to cut spending, the poor lose critically needed social welfare programs. While this is indeed one of the negative effects of adjustment policies, its criticism is shortsighted. Oftentimes, structural adjustment loans are given to countries with extreme budget deficits, which are the primary cause of runaway inflation. To combat this inflation, which in many loan-receiving countries can top 100 percent a month, most adjustment loans require cuts in government spending. Though cuts in spending hurt those who rely on welfare programs, runaway inflation poses a much greater risk to their livelihoods. When faced with hyperinflation, most people seek to place their assets into unaffected areas, such as real estate, gold, and foreign investments. This transfer of assets is relatively easy for the upper and middle classe s to accomplish. The poor, on the other hand, are often unable to shift their assets into unaffected areas due to their relative lack of access to the appropriate tools for doing so. As a result, the poor bear the brunt of hyperinflation, often losing their entire life savings in the process. Therefore, while cuts in government spending impose difficulties on the poor, they are merely temporary and pale in comparison to those caused by hyperinflation.

I agreed with all that were listed with the EXCEPTION OF the 3.5 million that would be earmarked for the CHANLYUT enterprise. They just got a newly remodeled living quarters and they have the Diner on the corner that could, if properly managed, generate funding. I have no idea what the 3.5 million would be spent on, nor have they presented any kind of proposals to the Community Council before trying to get the money from you.

If you must AX items from all the proposals being submitted, I strongly urge you to cut this one first.

thanks much for your time and consideration,

As you consider the capital budget, we ask that the $250,000 for Arctic Power funding not be included. The oil industry has almost unlimited resources to hire their own lobbyists and it seems wrong to bring Gordon Liddy, a convicted felon, to Alaska to advocate on the radio for drilling in the Arctic Refuge. It seems especially wasteful at this time as opening the Refuge is highly unlikely with the Democratic Congress and all three presidential candidates opposed. Money could better be spent on education, health care, highway maintenance, revenue sharing, or put into a savings account. Thank you for you consideration.

Message:Dear Governor Palin

I appreciate your effort to put aside some of the budget surplus for use at a later time. However, some of the surplus could be put to a very effective use now.

I propose using some of the surplus to help pay off debts of non-profit social service institutions such as Community Health Centers. For example,the Anchorage Neighborhood Health Center and Mat-Su Health Services could use the money to pay off long term debts such as mortgages. If these were paid off, money could be used to expand services, and pay employees a decent wage. Using surplus funds now to eliminate debt throughout the public sector would pay dividends far down the road. Money that has been borrowed to finance schools could be paid back, freeing up more money for education, and improvement of our university system. Is it wise to be paying interest when we don't have to? We should be able to pay for things as we go, without borrowing.

We have an opportunity to INVEST in Alaska's future, that will pay dividends far in excess of what we could earn by saving for a rainy day. Let us wisely use the money we have now to make sure we have an economy that will continue to provide for all Alaskans, when the resource extraction phase of our economy is waning.

Thanks for listening. I would appreciate a reply about the pracicality, legality and possibility of this approach.

Tom Leigh

Governor:

Rep. Wilson will be attending the reception tonight. If she complains about ferry service, we increased service to her communities (Petersburg, Wrangell, and Sitka) and ridership is up so far about 30% over last year. Sitka has 5 day a week service to Juneau this summer from the fast ferry which is the boat it always wanted. We have worked very hard to improve service for these communities.

There have been 3 mechanical problems with the ferries recently. Two of those problems were caused by union engineers making mistakes that led to equipment problems. The issue of whether AMHS has to continue to use union engineers is up for negotiations now. The union is talking to legislators like Rep. Wilson and trying to cover its members by saying they were not allowed to buy the right parts by management and that it is a budget issue. AMHS management says that is absolutely not true. AMHS managers and I will be meeting with Rep. Wilson this week to politely explain the facts.
